FOUR-ALARM FIRE

GONG! GONG! GONG! The fire bell rang loudly in the Zooville Fire House. It was the middle of the night. Jumping out of their beds, the firemen leaped into their uniforms and hats. They ran to the hole in the middle of the room. Up through the hole poked a shiny brass pole. SWISH! Down the pole slid the first fireman, Benny Bear. Down the pole slid the second fireman, Davey Dog. Down the pole slid the third fireman, Walter Weasel. Down the pole slid the fourth fireman, Frankie Frog. But the fifth fireman? Where was he?

"Terry!" yelled the Fire Chief. "Terry Turtle!"

"Coming!" a voice squeaked from up above.

Then, while the Fire Chief and the four other firemen waited impatiently in the fire engine, Terry Turtle, the fifth fireman, struggled down the pole. He jumped onto the back of the fire engine just as the driver zoomed it out the door, sirens screaming through the darkness.

The Fire Chief shouted above the noise of the sirens. "You, Terry Turtle! A four-alarm fire, and you're late! What's your excuse this time, huh?"

Terry screamed back, "I . . . uh . . . I couldn't find my belt. It was under the bed."

"Excuses, excuses, always excuses," the Fire Chief howled. "You're just plain pokey, that's all. Slowpokey!"

"Sorry, sir," said Terry Turtle.

Just then the fire engine careened around a corner. Terry grabbed for his hat as the wind snatched at it. He lost his hold on the fire ladder. BOOM! Off he fell into the street, flat on his shell-back, while the fire engine screamed down the street ahead of him.

By the time Terry arrived at the fire on foot, it was already put out. Only a few wisps of smoke remained. The other four firemen were re-packing the fire-fighting gear onto the fire engine.

"So!" The Fire Chief sneered at Terry Turtle. "You've decided to join us now that the fire's out. Fine 'n dandy!"

"I . . . uh . . . I . . ."

"I know, I know, you fell off. Well, this is the end, Mr. Ex-Fireman. I've had enough of your clumsiness and excuses."

"Oh please, please," Terry begged. "Give me one more chance. All my life I wanted to be a fireman, I never wanted to be anything else, I only—"

"Yes, you already told me," sneered the Fire Chief. "But just wanting to be a fireman isn't enough. You've got to learn to be fast."

"I'll learn, I'll learn," the turtle promised.

The Fire Chief replied, "Well, if you've learned to be a good fast fireman by the time the next fire alarm rings, I'll keep you. Otherwise—"

Terry didn't wait to hear the end of the sentence. He had no time to lose. He must find someone who'd teach him to be fast. Out to the country he hurried until he reached the deep woods. He passed many animals but he ignored them all until he found a monkey, who was swinging from tree to tree.

"Mr. Monkey," the turtle said, "how can I get to be fast and agile and sure-footed as you are?"

The monkey stopped and looked at Terry doubtfully. He doubted if a turtle could ever be fast and agile. But this turtle looked so anxious that the monkey said, "Come along with me. I'll teach you."

So the monkey and the turtle spent that whole afternoon practicing. A hundred times the monkey slid down the skinny trunk of a coconut palm tree, and a hundred times Terry followed him. By the hundredth time, Terry was doing it just as fast as the monkey was! Then the monkey taught him the trick of hanging onto branches without ever falling off, how to throw his clothes on in just two seconds! He taught Terry so many tricks of quickness that by the time the sun set the impossible had happened: a turtle had learned to be almost as fast as a monkey!

That midnight, when the five firemen were again asleep in the upstairs bedroom, the gong rang out: BONG! BONG! BONG! BONG! Another four-alarm fire! Zipp! Terry shot out from under his covers while Benny Bear was just getting his second eyelid open. Zoom! Terry hopped into his uniform and was all dressed while Davy Dog was just buttoning the first button on his shirt. SWISH! Terry slid so fast down the pole that he was just a blur of motion, leaving Walter Weasel and Frankie Frog staring down at him through the hole in amazement! And then . . .

"Let's go, sir!" Terry said to the Fire Chief. He had beaten even The Chief himself to the fire engine. The Chief climbed on board, and then the other firemen arrived. Out into the night they zoomed, sirens screaming, and when they arrived at the blazing house it was Terry who had his ladder up to the window first, and it was Terry who rescued everyone, and Terry whose fast hosing doused most of the flames.

Afterwards he asked the Chief, "Okay, sir?"

"Okay!" the Chief laughed. "You're stupendous! What happened? Did you turn into a monkey overnight?"

"Sort of, sir!" Terry laughed back.
